

BAREPDF

A reader that stays out of the way

A SMALL REFUSAL

Against techno-feudal software.
For the right to simply read.

Efe Arabacı

A personal manifesto for BarePDF

A small refusal against techno-feudalism.

I am Efe Arabacı. I made BarePDF because a document should not become a pretext for a platform. Opening a PDF should not require a ceremony, an account, a cloud, or a small tribute to a company that has mistaken your attention for property.

THE LITTLE KINGDOM OF SOFTWARE

The castle is often a dashboard.

We have entered an age of techno-feudalism. A handful of landlords rent us tools that used to be ordinary objects. They collect our data at the gate, ask us to sign in before we may see our own files, and call the resulting dependence convenience. The castle is often a dashboard. The tax is often a notification.

BARE MEANS ENOUGH

A quiet reader is a political position.

BarePDF reads documents locally. No mandatory account. No cloud dependency. No tracking disguised as helpfulness. No advertising squeezed into the margins. Update checks are optional. The reader should spend its resources on the page, not on unnecessary feature theater built to justify a subscription.

THE SMALL REFUSAL

Less theater. More ownership.

A reader that consumes a small library of memory to show one page is not merely inefficient. It asks the machine, the battery, and the person in front of it to subsidise someone else's product strategy. I would rather leave room for the document.

THE TERMS

- NO ACCOUNT REQUIRED
- NO CLOUD DEPENDENCY
- NO TRACKING
- NO ADS
- OPTIONAL UPDATE CHECKS

You are not the product. You are the person who opened the file. That should be enough.
